

Manning at the Line

by Jonathan Wallace

Peyton Manning approaches the ball, standing tall, focused on his next call

Ray Lewis and the Ravens shuffle and re-shuffle all along the line

Peyton points to Reggie Wayne, assigns him a route

The Ravens are confused and Ray Lewis begins to shout

Peyton snaps the ball and everyone begins to move

Reggie Wayne is open, alone in the end zone

Peyton sees Reggie and the ball is thrown

Reggie makes the catch and his feet are down

The Referee makes the call "Touchdown"

Intolerant Dog and His Bone

by Brandon Bowers

Sitting and drooling, the dog stared. He was gazing upon the large, stained dog bone. His petite, glassy eyes could not be moved from the lifeless treat. Helplessly he would scratch at the new glassy table to receive his delicacy. As the wood with its firmness and durability did not release the bone, the restless dog would become irritated. It would whine as if screaming to the table, "Give me the bone!" Without a reply the ardent dog would continue his quest of gazing and waiting. The white-patched black animal would occasionally blink as it moved to a different spot to gaze at the majestic bone. Finally without warning it impatiently pounced on the table with immense force and snatched the bone with its jagged teeth. With high pride the dog trotted away.

tiently pounced on the table with immense force and snatched the bone with its jagged teeth. With high pride the dog trotted away.

The Light

by Alexandra Morrison

The sun begins its journey in the east
The moon fades away in fear
The colors prepare a wonderful feast
Yet no one is shedding a tear

We move so quickly, no one stops and stares
Why can't we sit and wait?
It seems like people do not even care
Something small can be so great

The world for a moment is in total peace
No war or pain can touch us
The problems in our world will soon decrease
With time, nothing to discuss

The night cloaks
With cheerless thoughts of death
Light flies with each ray of sun
The sun gives light its oh so needed breath