

Moving Day

by Mandy Fatemi

He held her hand as if never to let go
But from his eyes she knew something didn't quite fit
He was going, moving, forever and gone
She was a delicate candle, blown out when lit
Speechless, shocked, and forever greatly dismayed
Her heart dropped, it moaned, her soft smile was now gone
His crooked smile disappeared, her eyes watered, this couldn't be
He was packing his clothes along with her heart, her feelings withdrawn
They held each other for a moment or two Silent, as if the sadness had swallowed the night
He wiped away the tears that had flooded her eyes
She let him go, into the darkness, out of the light

When people love each other they say forever and for always
But what happens when forever only lasts a day?
Things happen, things change, life will never stay the same
Her heart will always be broken because of the day, the day he moved away

Fighting

by Savannah Wood

A swordsman clinking and clanking
With another
He stops to take a break

Sparkling in the light
He gets a head start
And plunges into the heart of the unknown

The Soccer Player

by Brandon Bowers

The soccer player
Turns around to see the field
Now running toward the ball
He trips

He finds himself on the ground
Feeling a sharp pain
And then he's entangled
In the net
