

To Hear a Song

By Marisa Suarez

Based on "To Look at Any Thing" by John Moffit

To hear a song,
To really hear it,
You must listen hard:
To listen to "Helena" and say
"I love My Chemical Romance"- will not fly- you have to Be the music you hear:
Your heart must pound as the angry drum pounds,
You must weep as the shrill sound of the shredding guitar weeps, Feel the bass surging through your veins, like the baritone voice of a melancholy man,
You must enter into the musician's thoughts
And live the feelings they are trying to invoke.

by Drew Gibson

The Time

By Amanda Lee

A black and white clock with two clicking hands reveals to me the time, so I can make my plans.
Wind it once a year and it will stay updated, what would we do, if the clock was not created?

To Truly Feel Pity

By Alex Henderson

Based on "To Look at Any Thing" by John Moffit

To truly feel pity,
If you would feel their sorrow,
You must consider their pain with depth of mind:
To see their tearful tragedy and say
'I have felt their loss and feel I know Them' will not do – you must Reflect on their mourning:
You must feel the insidious creeping thoughts of Long dark nights and the ache of unbidden memories,
You must experience
The grief and terror behind
The weak smiles,
You must judge wisely
And feel the very source of the disaster
They must live with forever.